Hymn

Dr. Collyer recalls an interesting passage between Ralph Waldo Emerson and Oliver Wendell Holmes. The latter said that many of the hymns in use were mere pieces of cabinet work. Then his voice deepened and his eyes shone, as they did in his noblest moments, and he said, "One hymn I think supreme." Emerson threw back his head and waited, while Dr. Holmes repeated the text of the following song. Emerson responded: "I know that is the supreme hymn. 'I shall be satisfied when I awake in Thy likeness.'" quoted from Prof. Shutter's Chapter "The God of Evolution" in his essays "Applied Evolution." Universalist Pub. Co.

Note: The assumption, in the text, that the result of our national election in 1920, was a definite indication, that the country, (at least, the majority-mind) turned its back on a high purpose is not conclusive. Unfortunately election returns coming through the present party system prove nothing conclusively. The voice of the people sounding through the mouth of the parties, becomes somewhat emasculated. It is not inconceivable that practical ways may be found for more accurately registering and expressing popular thought—at least, in relation to the larger primary problems, which concern us all. A suggestion to this end (if we may be forgiven a further digression) in the form of a constitutional amendment together with an article discussing the plan in some detail and from various aspects, will be gladly sent, by the writer, to any one who is interested enough to write for it.

In march time

The musical score is written for voice and piano. It begins with a treble clef, a key signature of one flat (B-flat), and a 4/4 time signature. The tempo is marked 'In march time'. The piano accompaniment starts with a forte (f) dynamic. The melody is introduced in the piano's right hand, with the left hand providing harmonic support. The lyrics are written below the vocal line. The score includes a repeat sign at the beginning of the piano part. The lyrics are: 'Fif - teen years a - go to-day A lit - tle Yan-kee, lit-tle Yan - kee boy', 'Fif - teen years a - go to-day A lit - tle Yan-kee, with a Ger - manname', 'There's a time in ev' - ry life, When it's do or die and our Yan-kee boy'. The score continues with a piano part marked 'Col 8 ad lib.' and a vocal part marked 'mf' starting at measure 4. The piano part continues with a steady accompaniment. The lyrics continue: 'Marched be - side his grand - dad - dy — In the dec - or - a - tion day par -', 'Heard the tale of "for - ty eight" Why his Grand - dad - dy joined Un - cle', 'Does his bit that we may live, In a world where all may have a'. The score ends with a final piano part and a vocal line.

Moderato

The musical score is for the song "In the Alley". It is in 2/4 time, marked "Moderato", and features a key signature of one sharp (F#). The score is written for voice and piano. The piano accompaniment begins with a melodic line in the right hand and a bass line in the left hand, both featuring eighth and sixteenth notes. The voice enters at measure 5 with the lyrics "On my way to work on a summer day, just off the main high -". The piano accompaniment continues with a steady rhythm, and the voice continues with "way, Through a window in an alley smiled a lass, her name was Sally, O -". The score includes dynamic markings such as mp (mezzo-piano) and più ten. (more tenor). There are also performance instructions like "Attention! Geo. Felsburg! → l.h." and "turn newspaper" for the piano part.

The writer has been severely criticized for attempting to put music to texts of songs, which are masterpieces of great composers. The song above and some of the others, were written primarily as studies. It should be unnecessary to say that they were not composed in the spirit of competition; neither Schumann, Brahms or Franz will be the one to suffer by a comparison, another unnecessary statement. Moreover, they would probably be the last to claim a monopoly of anything—especially the right of man to the pleasure to trying to express in music whatever he wants to. These songs are inserted not so much in spite of this criticism as because of it.

Omens and Oracles

(about 1900)

Author unknown to composer

Andante moderato

The musical score is for a piece titled "Omens and Oracles" by an unknown author, composed around 1900. It is in 3/4 time and marked "Andante moderato". The score is presented in three systems, each with a vocal line and a piano accompaniment. The piano part features a prominent triplet pattern in the bass line. The vocal line includes lyrics in English.

System 1: The piano part begins with a mf (mezzo-forte) dynamic. The vocal line is silent in this system.

System 2: The vocal line begins with the lyrics "Phan - toms of the fu - - - ture,". The piano accompaniment continues with the triplet pattern. The dynamic is mp (mezzo-piano).

System 3: The vocal line continues with the lyrics "spec - tres of the past, In the". The piano accompaniment continues with the triplet pattern.

The musical score is written for voice and piano. It begins with a treble and bass staff for the piano, and a single staff for the voice. The key signature has one flat (B-flat), and the time signature is 4/4. The tempo is marked 'Con moto (not slowly)'. The score is divided into four systems. The first system shows the piano introduction with a melody in the right hand and a bass line in the left hand, both marked 'p'. The second system starts at measure 6 and includes the first line of the vocal melody with the lyrics 'Then I be-hold thee, See thee, the same lov-ing sweet-heart of old.' The piano accompaniment continues. The third system starts at measure 9 and includes the second line of the vocal melody with the lyrics 'Through sea-sons glid-ing, Thou are a-bi-ding In the depths of my heart un-told;'. The piano accompaniment features a crescendo and a change in dynamics to 'mf'. The fourth system starts at measure 13 and includes the third line of the vocal melody with the lyrics 'For I do love thee, May God a-bove His guard-ing care un-fold.' The piano accompaniment returns to 'p' and is marked 'a tempo'. The score ends with a final chord in the piano.

NOTE: The song above is a common illustration (and not the only one in this book) of how inferior music is inclined to follow inferior words and "vice-versa." The music was originally written to the sacred words printed last, (and the best of the three.) Some thirty years ago it was sung in a country church and even as a response after the prayer. The congregation not only tolerated it, but accepted it apparently with satisfaction. That music of this character is less frequently heard in religious services no-a-days is one of the signs of the wholesome progress of music in this country. An "Amen" was tacked on to the end of this song; a relative of the composer remarked, at the time, that it was about as appropriate to this kind of a tune as a benediction would be after an exhibition of the "Circassian Beauty" at the "Danbury Fair."

The World's Highway

Allegretto (but not too fast)

The musical score is written for voice and piano. It begins with a piano introduction in G major, 2/4 time, marked mp. The piano part features a rhythmic pattern of eighth and sixteenth notes. The vocal melody enters at measure 5, marked mf. The lyrics are: "For long I wan-der'd hap - pi - ly Far out on the world's high-". The piano accompaniment continues with a steady eighth-note pattern. At measure 9, the vocal melody continues with the lyrics: "- way My heart was brave for each new thing and I loved the far - a -". The piano part provides harmonic support with chords and moving lines. At measure 13, the tempo changes to Più mosso and the key signature changes to G minor (indicated by one flat). The vocal melody begins with the lyrics: "- way. I watch'd the gay bright peo - ple dance, We laughed, for the". The piano accompaniment changes to a more rhythmic pattern, featuring chords and eighth notes. The score ends with a final chord in G minor.

Leigh Hunt, in his Essays, "Rhyme and Reason," says: "...yet how many 'poems' are there....of which we require no more than the rhymes, to be acquainted with the whole of them? You know what the rouges have done by the ends they come to. For instance, what more is necessary to inform us all of the following gentleman has for sale, than the bell he tinkles as the end of his cry? We are as sure of him as the muffin-man." Then he quotes the beautiful text, found in the song below. It is called a 'Love Song,' but this is not enough; when attached to music, it becomes a "Morceau du Coeur," a "Romanzo di Central Park," or an "Intermezzo Table d'hôte." "...Was there ever peroration more eloquent? Ever a series of catastrophes more explanatory of their previous history?"

The musical score is written for voice and piano. It consists of four systems of music. The first system (measures 1-4) features a vocal melody with a piano accompaniment. The second system (measures 5-8) includes a key signature change to 3/4 time and a tempo change to 'rall.'. The third system (measures 9-12) continues the vocal melody and piano accompaniment. The fourth system (measures 13-16) concludes the piece with a final vocal phrase and piano accompaniment. The score includes various musical notations such as treble and bass clefs, time signatures, key signatures, dynamics, and articulation marks.

The musical score is written for voice and piano. The key signature has two flats (B-flat and E-flat), and the time signature is 3/4. The score is divided into three systems. The first system (measures 1-6) is marked 'Largo' and 'p'. The second system (measures 7-14) is marked 'più rit.'. The third system (measures 15-18) starts with a key change to one flat (F major/D minor) and a time signature change to 2/4, marked 'mp', and then returns to 3/4 with a 'poco accel.' marking and a 'p' dynamic. The piano accompaniment features arpeggiated chords in the first system, a more active melody in the second, and a mix of chords and moving lines in the third.

The texts to Nos. 16, 29, 59 are from Books or Essays indicated, which do not give the source of the quotations.

The authors of the words to Nos. 76, 86, are unknown to the composer or the editor.

Where no author is indicated the words are by Harmony Twichell Ives or her Husband.

Nos. 5, 7, 8, 9a, 16, 20, 30, 40, 42, 44, 45, 46, 47, 62, 66, 94, 98, 99, 100, 105, 107, may be found suitable for some religious services

Nos. 28, 53, 85, 86, 87, 89, 90, 96, have little or no musical value—(a statement which does not mean that the others have any too much of it). These are inserted principally because in the writer's opinion they are good illustrations of types of songs, the fewer of which are composed, published, sold, or sung, the better it is for the progress of music generally. It is asked—(probably a superfluous request)—that they be not sung, at least in public, or given to students except as examples of what not to sing.

Nos. 15, 47, 59, 69, are adapted from orchestral scores.

Nos. 54, 56, are brass-band marches.

Nos. 44, 45, 46 are from violin sonatas.

Greek philosophers, ward-politicians, unmasked laymen, and others, have a saying that bad-habits and bad-gardens grow to the "unintendedables"; whether these are a kind of "daucus carota," "men," "jalis" or mechanistic theories of life" is not known,—but the statement is probably or probably not true. The printing of this collection was undertaken primarily, in order to have a few clear copies that could be sent to friends who, from time to time, have been interested enough to ask for copies of some of the songs; but the job has grown into something different,—it contains plenty of songs which have not been and will not be asked for. It stands now, if it stands for anything, as a kind of "buffer state,"—an opportunity for evading a question, somewhat embarrassing to answer,—"Why do you write so much ———, which no one ever sees?" There are several good reasons, none of which are worth recording.

Another, but unconvincing, reason for not asking publishers to risk their capital or singers their reputations, may be charged to a theory,—(perhaps it is little more than a notion, for many do not agree with it, —to be more exact, a man did agree with it once; he had something to sell,—a book, as I remember, called "The truth about something," or "How to write Music while Shaving!") Be that as it may,—our theory has a name—it is, "The balance of values," or "The circle of sources"; (in these days, of chameleon efficiency, every whim must be classified under a scientific sounding name, to save it from investigation). It stands something like this: That an interest in any art-activity, from poetry to baseball is better, broadly speaking, if held as a part of life, or of a life, than if it sets itself up as a whole—a condition verging, perhaps, towards a monopoly or possible a kind of atrophy of the other important values, and hence reacting unfavorably upon itself. In the former condition, this interest, this instinctive impulse, this desire to pass from "minor to major," this artistic-intuition, or whatever you call it, may have a better chance to be more natural, more comprehensive, perhaps, freer and so more tolerant,—it may develop more muscle in the hind legs and so find a broader vantage ground for jumping to the top of a fence, and more interest in looking around,—if it happens to get there.

Now all this may not be so; the writer certainly cannot and does not try to prove it by his own experience, but he likes to think the theory works out somewhat in this way. To illustrate further (and to become more involved): if this interest, and everyone has it, is a component of the ordinary life,—if it is free primarily to play the part of the, or a, reflex, subconscious-expression, or something of that sort, in relation to some fundamental share in the common work of the world, as things go, is it nearer to what nature intended it should be, than if, as suggested above, it sets itself up as a whole,—not a dominant value only, but a complete one? If a fiddler or poet does nothing all day long but enjoy the luxury of drudgery of fiddling or dreaming, with or without meals, does he or does he not, for this reason, have anything valuable to express?—or is whatever he thinks he has to express less valuable than he thinks? This is a question which each man must answer for himself. It depends to a great extent, on what a man nails up on his dashboard as "valuable." Does not the sinking back into the soft state of mind (or possibly a non-state of mind) that may accept "art for art's sake," tend to shrink rather than toughen up the hitting muscles,—and incidentally those of the umpire or the grand stand, if there be one? To quote from a book that is not read:—"Is not beauty in music too often confused with something which lets the ears lie back in an easy-chair? Many sounds that we are used to, do not bother us, and for that reason are we not too easily inclined to call them beautiful? . . . Possibly the fondness for personal expression, —the kind in which self-indulgence dresses up an miscalls freedom,—may throw out a skin-deep arrangement, which is readily accepted at first as beautiful—formulae that weaken rather than toughen the musical-muscles. If a composer's conception of his art, it's functions and ideals, even if sincere, coincide to such an extent with these groove-colored permutations of tried out progressions in expediency, so that he can arrange them over and over again to his delight—has he or has he not been drugged with an overdose of habit-forming sounds? And as a result do not the muscles of his clientele become flabbier and flabbier until they give way altogether and find refuge only in exciting platitudes,—even the sensual outbursts of an emasculated rubber-stamp,—a 'Zaza,' a 'Salome' or some other money-getting costume of effeminate manhood? In many cases probably not,—but there is this tendency."

If the interest, under discussion, is the whole and the owner is willing to let it rest as the whole, will it not produce something less vital than the ideal which underlies, or which did underlie it? And is the resultant work from this interest as free as it should be from a certain influence of reaction which is brought on or, at least, is closely related to the artist's over-anxiety about its effect upon others?

And to this, also, no general answer must be given,—each man will answer it for him self—if he feels like answering questions. The whole matter is but one of the personal conviction. For as Mr. Sedgwick says in his helpful and inspiring little book about Dante, "in judging human conduct,"—and the manner in which an interest in art is used has to do with human conduct,—"we are dealing with subtle mysteries of motives, impulses, feelings, thoughts that shift, meet, combine and separate like clouds."

Every normal man,—that is, every uncivilized of civilized human being not of defective mentality, moral sense, etc., has, in some degree, creative insight (an unpopular statement) and an interest, desire and ability to express it (another unpopular statement). There are many, too many, who think they have none of it, and stop with the thought or before the thought. There are a few who think (and encourage others to think) that they and they only have this insight, interest, etc. . . . and that (as a kind of collateral security) they and they only know how to give true expression to it, etc. But in every human soul there is a ray of celestial beauty (Plotinus admits that) and a spark of genius (nobody admits that). If this is so, and if one of the greatest sources of strength,—one of the greatest joys, and deepest pleasures of men, is giving rein to it in some way, why should not every one instead of a few, be encouraged, and feel justified in encouraging everyone including himself to make this a part of every one's life and his life,—a value that will supplement the other values and help round out the substance of the soul?

Condorcet, in his attitude towards history,—Dryden, perhaps when he sings, “—from heavenly harmony, This universal frame began The diapason closing full in man,”—more certainly Emerson in the “Over-soul” and “common-heart” seem to lend strength to the thought that this germ-plasm of creative-art, interest and work is universal, and that its selection-theory is based on any condition that has to do with universal encouragement. Encouragement here is taken in the broad sense of something akin to unprejudiced and intelligent examination, to sympathy and unconscious influence,—a thing felt rather than seen. The problem of direct encouragement is more complex and exciting but not as fundamental or important. It seems to the writer that the attempts to stimulate interest by elaborate systems of contests, prizes etc., are a little overdone nowadays. Something of real benefit to art may be accomplished in this way, —but perhaps the prizes may do the donors more good than the donees. Possibly the pleasure and satisfaction of the former in having done what they consider a good deed, may be far greater than the improvement on the quality of the latter's work. In fact, the process may have an enervating effect upon the latter,—it may produce more Roderick Hudsons than Beethovens. Perhaps something of greater value could be caught without this kind of bait. Perhaps the chief value of the plan is to establish a “course at Rome” to raise the standard of American music (or the standard of American composers—which is it?) may be in finding a man strong enough to survive it. To see the sunrise a man has but to get up early, and he can always have Bach in his pocket. For the amount of a month's wages, a grocery-clerk can receive “personal instruction” from Beethoven and other living “conservatories.” Possibly, the more our composer accepts from his patrons, “et al.,” the less he will accept from himself. It may be possible that a month in a “Kansas wheat field” will do more for him than three years in Rome. It may be, that many men—perhaps some of genius— (if you won't admit that all are geniuses) have been started on the downward path of subsidy by trying to write a thousand dollar prize poem or a ten thousand dollar prize opera. How many master-pieces have been prevented from blossoming in this way? A cocktail will make a man eat more, but will not give him a healthy, normal appetite (if he had not that already). If a bishop should offer a “prize living” to the curate who will love God the hardest for fifteen days, whoever gets the prize would love God the least,—probably. Such stimulants, it strikes us, tend to industrialize art, rather than develop a spiritual sturdiness—a sturdiness which Mr. Sedgwick says shows itself in a close union between spiritual life and the ordinary business of life, against spiritual feebleness which shows itself in the separation of the two. And for the most of us, we believe, this sturdiness would be encouraged by anything that will keep or help us keep a normal balance between the spiritual life and the ordinary life. If for every thousand dollar prize a potato field can be substituted, so that these candidates of “Clio” can dig a little in real life, perchance dig up a natural inspiration, art's-air might be a little clearer—a little freer from certain traditional delusions,—for instance, that free thought and free love always go to the same café—that atmosphere and diligence are synonymous. To quote Thoreau incorrectly: “When half-Gods talk, the Gods walk!” Everyone should have the opportunity of not being over-influenced. But these unpopular convictions should stop,—“On ne donne rien si libéralement que ses conseils.”

A necessary part of this part of progressive evolution (for they tell us not that evolution is not always progressive) is that every one should be as free as possible to encourage every one, including himself, to work, and to be willing to work where this interest directs,—“to stand and be willing to stand, unprotected, from all the showers of the absolute which may beat upon him,—to use or learn to use or , at least, to be unafraid of trying to use, whatever he can, of any and all lessons of the infinite which humanity has received and thrown to him—that nature has exposed and sacrificed for him,—that life and death have translated for him,” until the products of his labor shall beat around and though his ordinary work,—shall strengthen, widen and deepen all his senses, aspirations, or whatever the innate power and impulses may be called, which God has given man.

Everything from a mule to an oak, which nature has given life has a right to that life, and a right to throw into that life all the values it can. Whether they be approved by a human mind or seen with a human eye, is no concern of that right. The right of a tree, wherever it stands, is to grow as strong and as beautiful as it can whether seen or unseen,—whether made immortal by a Turner,—translated into a part of Seraphic architecture or a kitchen table. The instinctive and progressive interest of every man in art, we are willing to affirm with no qualification, will go on and on, every fulfilling hopes, every building new ones, ever opening new horizons, until the day will come when every man while digging his potatoes will breathe his own Epics, his own Symphonies (operas if he likes it); and as he sits of an evening in his backyard and shirt sleeves smoking his pipe and watching his brave children in their fun of building their themes, for their sonatas of their life, he will look up over the mountains and see his visions, in their reality,—will hear the transcendental strains of the day's symphony, resounding in their many choirs, and in all their perfection, through the west wind and the tree tops!

It was not Mark Twain but the "Danbury News Man" who became convinced that a man never knows his vices and virtues until that great and solemn event, that first sunny day in spring when he wants to go fishing, but stays home and helps his wife clean house. As he lies on his back under his the bed,—under al the beds,—with nothing beneath him but tacks and his past life,—with his soul (to say nothing of his vision), full of that glorious dust of mortals and carpets,—with his finger-tips rosy with the caresses of his mother-in-law's hammer (her annual argument),—as he lies there taking orders from the hired girl, a sudden and tremendous vocabulary comes to him. Its power is omnipotent, it consumes everything,—but the rubbish heap. Before it his virtues quail, hesitate and crawl carefully out of the cellar window; his vices, —even they go back on him,—even they can't stand this,—he seems them march with stately grace (and others) out of the front door. At this moment there comes a whisper,—the still small voice of a "parent on his father's side"—Vices and Virtues! Vices and Virtues! They ain't no sech things, —but ther'e a tarnal lot of 'em." Wedged in between the sewing machine and the future he examines himself, as every man in his position should do;—"What has brought me to this?—Where am I? Why do I do this?"—"these are the natural inquiries. They have assailed thousands before our day; they will afflict thousands in years to come and probably there is no form of interrogation so loaded with subtle torture,—unless it is to be asked for a light in a strange depot by a man you've just selected out of seventeen thousand as the one man the most likely to have a match. Various authors have various reasons for bringing out a book, and this reason may or may not be the reason they give to the world; I know and care not. It is not for me to judge the world unless I am elected. It is a matter which lies between the composer and his own conscience, and I know of no place where it is less likely to be crowded. . . . Some have written a book for money; I have not. Some for fame; I have not. Some for love; I have not. Some for kindlings; I have not. I have not written a book for any of these reasons or for all of them together. In fact, gentle borrower, I have not written a book at all"—I have merely cleaned house. All that is left out on the clothes line,—but it's good for a man's vanity to have the neighbors see him—on the clothes line.

For some such for different reason; through some such or different process this volume,—this package of paper, uncollectible notes, marks of respect and expression, is now thrown, so to speak, at the music fraternity, who for this reason will feel free to dodge it on its way—perhaps to the waste basket. It is submitted as much or more in the chance that some points for the better education of the composer may be thrown back at him, than that any of the points the music may contain may be valuable to the recipient.

Some of the songs in this book, particularly among the later ones, cannot be sung,—and if the could perhaps might prefer, if they had a say, to remain as they are,—that is, "in the leaf,"—and that they will remain in this peaceful state is more than presumable. An excuse (if none of the above are good enough) for their existence, which suggests itself at this point, is that a song has a few rights the same as other ordinary citizens. If it feels like walking along the left hand side of the street—passing the door of physiology or sitting on the curb, why not let it? If it feels like kicking over an ash can, a poet's castle, or the prosodic law, will you stop it? Must it always be a polite triad, a "breve gaudium," a ribbon to match the voice? Should it not be free at times from the dominion of the thorax, the diaphragm, the ear and other points of interest? If it wants to beat around in the valley, to throw stones up the pyramids, or to sleep in the park, should it not have some immunity from a Nemesis, a Rameses, or a policeman? Should it not have a chance to sing to itself, if it can sing?—to enjoy itself, without making a bow, if it can't make a bow?—to swim around in any ocean, if it can swim, without having to swallow "hook and bait" or being sunk by an operatic geryhound? If it happens to feel like trying to fly where humans cannot fly,—to sing what cannot be sung—to walk in a cave, on all fours,—or to tighten up its girth in blind hope and faith, and try to scale mountains that are not—Who shall stop it!

— In short, must a song
always be a song!

C.E.I.
